In the past, organizations bought IT equipment (hardware and/or software provision) and managed it themselves.

Today, many organizations choose to buy IT services. Such services include: system monitoring, maintenance of servers and data storage systems, data backup and recovery, consulting, technical support and others.

Organizations providing IT services can provide them in various configurations (for example, server maintenance only, data backup only, or systems management only). IT services are usually part of a contract with an IT service provider.
