... THE WORLD'S LARGEST PRIMAVERA PROJECT PLANNER EDITION SERIAL NUMBER : U1312 ( SENIOR VERSION ) THE PROJECT: The project consists of 2 parts: 1. Testing and development. complete overview of the project and all the materials required. bug-fixes), the latter cost is allocated to the project manager. The Los Angeles Angels have reportedly signed Twins infielder Eduardo Escobar to a minor league contract, according to MLB.com's Bill Chastain (on Twitter). Chastain notes that the Angels' signing of Escobar is pending a physical. Escobar, 31, last appeared in the Majors in 2012 with the Twins. The Venezuelan-born infielder had spent the previous two seasons in Japan with the Rakuten Golden Eagles, and has appeared in parts of nine big league seasons with the Twins, Braves, Royals, Padres and Cubs. Over that span, he's posted a .284/.323/.398 batting line with three homers and 29 stolen bases. However, Escobar has yet to play a single MLB game. Armed with a solid bat, good range and solid glove work, the 6'1", 185-pound Escobar was a solid bench bat for the Braves' starting rotation from 2010-11, though he appeared in just 35 games. In 2011, Escobar hit .244/.297/.326 with two homers and 14 steals across 316 plate appearances for the Braves and Padres. The 29-year-old Escobar represents an interesting gamble for the Angels, who have turned to first base as a particular need in recent weeks, as noted by MLB.com's Alden Gonzalez. The Halos, who also are reportedly considering signing free agent third baseman David Freese, could use the veteran Escobar on the field as an option for spot starts in left field or at first base. Whether Escobar's lack of MLB experience or his drop in production from his time in Japan would preclude a big league role is difficult to forecast, but the likelihood is strong that he'd be used as a bench bat at the big league level, where he has regularly hit .300 or better in the past.
