5. The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. University of North Carolina (UNC). Division of Engineering and Physical Sciences. Department of Mechanical Engineering and Manufacturing Engineering. School of Engineering. Thinking about doing some backcountry skiing and caution is necessary. A couple of years ago, a few months into a summer backcountry trip from Lake Isabel, I found myself sitting on the edge of a crevasse on an island in the middle of the Great Slide Basin. It took a week to recover, and I've never used the "anticipate a problem" approach since. Now that you're thinking about doing some backcountry skiing, try this line: It's a fundamental principle of medicine that listening is more important than talking. When you can just "listen" to your own voice, rather than talk to it, you'll probably improve your ability to diagnose and treat various medical conditions. -- Dr. Amory B. Lovins Camping is a way of life for most people, and we don't typically think of it as a career choice. But for some, the campsite may be only a temporary stop in the realm of possible career paths. Here are some tips and hints for people considering a career in camping: 1. Camping knowledge is a respected career choice. The State Park Service has a job placement service which can help you find a park position or even start your own specialty career, such as horseback riding or dog showing. However, you must apply to the Service to receive information about them, and have a business and experience background. Ask your local State Park Service office for specific information. 2. Camping as a career option is open to people of all ages. If you like nature and the outdoors, living in tents and learning to use the most basic survival skills seems like just the ticket. With practice, you can get it down to a science. 3. Camping is a great way to save money. Camping is very inexpensive, and you can even find some vacation or camping "deals" on certain websites, such as Creative Camper.com. 4. Camping is a fulfilling career choice. If you enjoy the outdoors, being active, and know how to cope with the outdoors, the rewards of camping can be good. Camping is a rich
