This music does not resemble any music I have. Published on April 8, 2017 Find a Physician. In the end I believe this is just a case of setting yourself up for failure. It has been a little over two months since I had my last anxiety attack. A true professional surgeon would never do this. I was not afforded the opportunity to see the doctor when I did. I think all parents should be concerned when they see children with these issues. I m being forced to address these issues now because I no longer trust the medical system. I have talked to people who have had similar issues, and some who had the same surgery as me, and they have had bad experiences as well. I have been struggling with issues of trust for some time now, and I finally asked my psychiatrist why this was the case. He advised that we do something I said that I absolutely could not do that day, I asked him if I could live with the consequences and he gave me his best opinion. I have to live with the anxiety that I have to live with and hope that it helps me or that I can somehow figure out how to live with it. It s more than anxiety to me it s suffering. I feel like I am suffering from severe medical neglect. I am suffering physically and emotionally. With additional non-invasive testing I think I m fairly sure that I have a severe leak from the pituitary. Apparently my pituitary has a severe leak that makes it hard for me to retain fluids. My life is filled with so many little inconveniences. I can no longer drive in that car, and I am on the drive far more than I should be and it has been something I don t let myself do. I have just blown through my savings on everything from food to driving lessons to legal fees, and now I just don t know where I am going to go. My son has life threatening issues as well and my wife is stressed out to her limits. I feel like I am no longer a functioning, productive member of society, and none of the symptoms are going away. I am going to see
