The full potential of focal brachytherapy can be realized with two-dimensional proton microbeam scanning. A dedicated brachytherapy patient treatment unit is developed to perform both proton irradiation and brachytherapy. The dosimetry of proton beams inside the nozzle extension are detailed with non-negligible energy straggling effects, and the possibility to deliver a nearly infinitely narrow proton microbeam during scanning is analyzed. The irradiation of 1 cm² is demonstrated to be feasible without significant increase of integral dose in the treatment room. Specific planning and treatment techniques are proposed. By delivering low energy protons of 2 keV, sub-millimeter resolution can be achieved in a very short time. Possibilities for volume irradiation are demonstrated and a phantom irradiation of a 20 cm³ target volume of water is performed. By combining high-dose-rate brachytherapy and focal proton irradiation, significant advantages over traditional photon brachytherapy is expected. [Comparative study on the content of 1-nitrosamine and their metabolites in the air breathed in myeloma-bearing mice]. The concentration of 1-nitrosodimethylamine (NDMA), dimethylnitrosamine (DMNA), 1-nitrosamine, N-nitroso-N-methylurea (NMU) in the blood serum, lungs, liver and kidneys of myeloma-bearing C3H mice were determined. It was established that myeloma cells in the lungs, liver and kidneys produce metabolites of 1-nitrosamine. The content of 1-nitrosamine and its metabolites in myeloma-bearing mice may be correlated with the effect of the agent on the fixation of the tumour cells.
